

LANGSHAN

The Langshan is a dual-purpose endangered breed originating from China. They are graceful tall birds with feathered legs. They are good layers of brown eggs, but somewhat slow to mature to begin laying. Hens often are not the best brooders but are dedicated mothers once the chicks are hatched. Trimming the feathers around the birds' vents with dramatically improve fertility in this heavily feathered breed.

Main use – M/E

Egg Production – M

Size and color – L/Brown

Best kept free range and confined; cold hardy and heat tolerant.

Classified as Threatened by the ALBC.