

---

RUSSIAN ORLOFF

The Russian Orloff is a rare breed having been developed in the cold hostile climate of Russia's Siberian region. They are tall, well-feathered chickens with a somewhat game-like appearance. Their plumage, combined with their tiny walnut comb, small earlobes and minuscule wattles, makes the Orloff a very cold hardy breed. Males generally weigh 8.5 pounds, and hens weigh 6.5 pounds. Orloffs are primarily suited to meat production, but hens are reasonable layers of light brown eggs. Hens do not often go broody. In temperament, they are known to be calm birds although not considered docile.

Main use – O

Egg Production – M

Size and color – M/Brown

Best kept free range and confined; cold hardy.

Classified as Critical by the ALBC.